An Effective Remedy for Ants

In fighting household ants no one measure can be recommended that will afford satisfactory relief from these pests in all cases, as the procedure must be adapted largely to the individual case. The following formula, recommended by the Department of Entomology of the College of Agriculture, has, however, proved to be effective in many instances:

Dissolve five pounds of sugar in one and one-half pints of water in a double boiler and heat gently. Add one-fourth ounce of sodium arsenite dissolved in a little hot water to the syrup. Moisten a sponge in this syrup and place in a pint screw-top jar with the porcelain cap broken out and four large holes punched in the lid with a twenty-penny nail. The sponge should about half fill the interior of the jar. Prepare anywhere from one to six such jars and place them where the ants are foraging.

The worker ants will forage greedily on this for some hours, after which they often will not touch it unless it is moved a few feet or placed in another spot. The poisoned sweet is carried into the nest and a large proportion of the colony will die of slow poisoning. The sodium arsenite, it must be remembered, is POISONOUS and proper care should be taken to keep it away from children and the food supply.

In addition to this remedy, proper measures should be taken to remove so far as possible all food upon which the ants are foraging.

Secret of Good Jelly Making

Many housewives insist that the making of a good jelly depends upon luck, but any housewife may always have a perfect jelly if she knows the principles of jelly making and follows a few general rules.

The essential part of fruit juice that makes jelly set is a chemical substance called pectin. It is found in abundance in apples, currants, grapes, quince, and the white rinds of oranges and lemons. Small quantities are found in cherries, raspberries, blackberries, and pears. Since pectin is essential, the housewife should determine whether the fruit juice she expects to use contains any before she starts the jelly making process. To determine whether pectin is present, add two tablespoonfuls of grain alcohol to two tablespoonfuls of hot fruit juice. Cool, and if pectin is present, a lump of jelly will be formed. The size of the lump will indicate the amount of pectin present.

Fruit juice should also contain acid. By tasting it one can easily determine whether or not acid is present. If lacking, enough lemon juice or tartaric acid may be added to give the fruit a tart taste.

Sheep Die From Maggots

Much injury from maggots on sheep is reported this season. In ordinary years these maggots bother only the lambs, especially following docking and castration, when sores are exposed. The maggots develop in the clogged filth in the wool and work well over the hind quarters if not checked. If undisturbed they become so bad that serious injury and death frequently result. Under favorable conditions the maggots develop in twenty-four hours.

The College of Agriculture says that each sheep should be carefully examined, and enough lysol or some other strong dip of practically full strength at the first application should be poured on the maggots. Apply same as many times as is necessary to be effective. Then examine frequently, and when the maggots are all killed apply a healing salve so that the skin will keep soft and the wool will grow again.

Intestinal Worms in Poultry

Intestinal worms from infested poultry may be plainly seen in the droppings. For treatment, prevent the spread by removing all droppings in reach of the birds. Spray with a disinfectant.

Lime the infested yards, and plow. Place the poultry on fresh ground. For individual treatment, give each bird one teaspoonful of turpentine and one tablespoonful of Epsom salts. For 100 birds, dissolve 5 pounds of Epsom salts in warm water and mix in a wet mash.—College of Agriculture.

Water Chickens Often

It is surprising how much water a chicken will drink, particularly in hot weather. At this time fresh water is necessary to the rapidly growing chick and good producing hen. Water chicks in shallow dishes in the shade at least three times a day, preferably after each feed. A chicken wants a drink the last thing at night and the first thing in the morning, and it will not drink stale water.
